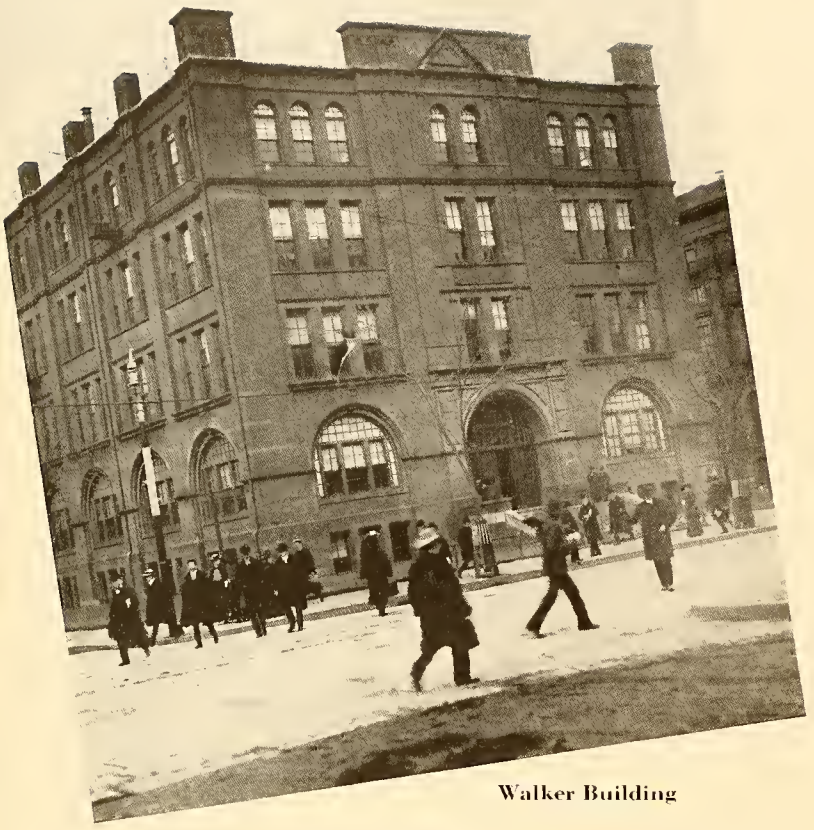
SIMMONS COLLEGE LIBRARY

Once



Walker Building

When the Stanley Steamer first alarmed the Gibson Girl as it puffed up Beacon Hill, Simmons College opened its doors to the first students.

That the doors belonged to Tech only increased the enthusiasm of those early Sally's. They dashed to chem lab in Walker Building, and crowded into Rogers for English, languages, and history. Besides Tech's loan of these classrooms on Boylston Street, the college had quarters rented at 30 Huntington Avenue. Here Sally studied shorthand, typewriting, and accounting. Just a buggy-ride away, on St. Botolph Street, her library classes met, and a few doors down stood the dorm, Simmons Hall. Many a Harvard beau came to call on Sally in the parlor of a Sunday afternoon. Her social evenings featured taffy-pulls, charades, and chaperones. John Steele was her Frank Sinatra, and her favorite song, "I'm Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage." It was the first bright year of a new endeavor, and she found life exciting, however earnest. Sally worked hard, and she made history.

When the school's enrollment increased at the end of that year, classes at Tech had to be discontinued. Simmons moved, book and bustle, to a new home at 739 Boylston Street. Here Sally invaded the three top floors for her science and typewriting classes. The library and college offices were also moved to Boylston Chambers.

And so a new experiment in feminine education began. Because it filled a need, the venture prospered, and soon Simmons was again bursting its rented seams. A search began for land on which to build permanent quarters. After much discussion, the Corporation decided on a swampy, duck-inhabited section of the Back Bay. And here it was that a resplendent new Simmons arose from the marshland. Sally packed up once more and moved into the building at 300 the Fenway that we know as the Simmons of today.

Some Day...

New Library

"The time has come," the walrus said, "to speak of many things." And we're speaking, not of cabbages and kings, but of many new buildings. To us, these buildings represent the pioneer spirit that is part of our fifty-year tradition, and has kept our college ahead in professional education. We see in them, too, an opportunity to enrich the Simmons life we have known, and which we picture here in our yearbook.

Social and Health Center

EDUCATION—some day soon, our new library will go up on the corner next to our Simmons. It will mean more reading and reference rooms, and better-than-ever training for student librarians. But best of all, the library represents a step forward in the education of all Simmons students.

Refectory

COOPERATION—we'll have a real Fenway campus, too, when the Social and Health Center is erected. All clubs and classes will meet there in their own rooms. We hope for a swimming pool and a dance studio to spur interest in the sports we lack now. A chapel and Little Theater will complete the picture so that all students can work together in active cooperation.

RECREATION—over on Brookline Avenue, too, we hope to see much building. First on the list is the new Refectory, and the present one will serve as a ballroom and party spot. New dorms, too, will mean more room for fun, making life at Simmons pleasant in work and play.

CLASSES—the Science building will complete the Fenway campus, providing new labs and equipment for technical courses, and more breathing room for all classes at number 300. When all these plans materialize, as they soon must, we hope to see a modern college, united in faith and in purpose. We, the class of '48, wish success to the classes of the future as we dedicate our Microcosm to a "New Simmons."

Science Building

Education

Liberal arts and professional training join hands at Simmons to educate in the modern manner, and prepare us for our work after graduation. Whatever our school, we will always be grateful to the college that has given us a sound and thorough design for living.

Since we gain much of our knowledge from books, a good library forms the basis of our learning. When the new library materializes, as it soon must, Simmons will offer even better means of education to the classes of the future.

President Bancroft Beatley

President Bancroft Beatley acts as co-ordinator of the administration, faculty, and student body. He shows forethought and geniality in dealing with undergraduates and alumnae, and has been tireless in his efforts to build a better Simmons. The president occasionally takes time out to pursue his musical interests or to tinker with his model railroad. The class of '48 wishes the president the greatest success in his position as head of a New Simmons.

Professor J. Garton Needham, Mr. Beatley's right-hand man, carries on the duties of Vice-President of the College. Students know him both as a capable executive and as one of their favorite psychology professors.

In a receiving line or behind her desk, Jane Louise Mesick, Dean of Simmons, shows a sincere interest in each student. Her sympathy, understanding, and warm personality make Dean Mesick counselor and friend to everyone at Simmons.

ies, and Professor of History, adjusts the graduate student to her new life at Simmons. Dr. Steiger plans courses of study and solves endless student problems.

Guiding light of all incoming freshmen and transfer students, Miss Doris M. Sutherland, Director of Admission and Guidance, conducts all interviews and advises courses of study. She directs a program in College Opportunities, which is a must for all new students.

Mrs. Margaret Gonyea, Registrar, has an uncanny knowledge of the number of credits and year-hours accumulated by every girl in the college. Mrs. Gonyea guides the student in the selection of courses for each semester.

The duties of Mr. Richmond K. Bachelder, the college Treasurer and Comptroller, range anywhere from collecting tuition fees to straightening out the complications of income tax blanks. He directs the upkeep of the college buildings, cashes innumerable checks, and manages all of Simmons' finances.

Dean Jane Louise Mesick

They make our little world

Miss Anna Hanson, Director of Placement, helps students to find employment after graduation. Undergrads and alumnae turn to this lady of personnel for both summer waitress jobs and full-time positions.

Freshmen spend approximately one-half of their school time in Library C on the ground floor of the college building. Upperclassmen climb skyward to study in Libraries A and B on the fourth floor. The book collection of the Simmons library totals 98,293 volumes, including the latest periodicals on professional subjects. Director of the Library is Miss Alice L. Hopkins, who shares the limitless knowledge of her profession by directing the students' course of reading.

Class-cutting culprits and conscientious supply-buyers have made browsing in the Bookstore a traditional activity at Simmons. Contrary to what its name implies, the Bookstore sells everything from the Manual of General Biology to fancy bottles of Chanel No. 5. The store, under the management of Mrs. Helen M. Bradstreet, supplies the student with essential and luxury articles. On the shelves and counters are colorful displays of ribbons, wrapping paper, cosmetics, and knick-knacks of copper, china, and wood.

Delectable odors permeate the corridors and point the way to the cafeteria. Here, hundreds of trays are juggled daily over the heads of other commuters who bring lunches from home. From 11:15 to 1:30, tasty, well-balanced luncheons are served at minimum expense to the student by Miss Mary G. Davidson and her competent staff of calorie-conscious workers.

When the apple-a-day treatment proves ineffective, students beat a hasty retreat to the Health Office, where Dr. Helen M. Ross is kept busy examining, diagnosing, and prescribing. The constant vigilance of the medical staff assures the good health of the students.

Miss Marie LaPorte, better known as the Curator of Lost Articles, is said to have collected enough fountain pens, scarfs, jewelry, and gloves to open a store equal in size to Jordan Marsh Company. From her post in the information cubicle, Miss LaPorte answers several hundred telephone calls daily, and directs all letters, packages, and lost persons to their proper destinations. "Meet me at Info" has become the by-word in the Simmons vocabulary.

Over on upperclass campus, Miss Ruth Danielson, Director of Residence, solves dormitory dilemmas and looks out for the welfare of her students. A block or so away, Mrs. Frank Cooper keeps freshman heads cool by counselling students who are away from home for the first time.

Simmons girls really mean it when they say that a girl's best friend is her prof. Furthermore, they have proved that there is such a thing as friendly relations between the students and their instructors.

Throughout the year, Stu-G sponsored a series of informal teas, where the students and the faculty mingled and chatted over their teacups. Open meetings, Field Day, and Simmons Night at Pops further testify to the fact that students do get along fine with their professors.

The faculty is interested in progress and ideas of the students too. Several clubs and organizations at Simmons include faculty names on their active membership lists.

This genial relationship extends even to the classroom. Students are free at any time to discuss with their teachers any personal difficulties encountered in their courses of study.

More and more, both student and faculty problems are being solved through the friendly functioning of the two groups.

Business is business is business

Paul L. Salsgiver, Director

Business school girls are those students whose fingernails are kept short and clipped, and who are weighted down with reams of accounting sheets. They are the girls whose education calls for proficiency in both cultural and professional subjects. The program of the School of Business is designed to enable them to qualify for executive-secretarial and administrative positions in the business world.

The student may prepare for work in advertising, personnel, accounting, office management, and inter-American relations. Or she may train for medical and scientific secretarial work. During her four years at Simmons, the student takes specialized courses in her chosen field, and also studies subjects closely related to her particular interests.

For two weeks in the spring, she takes time out from the business classroom to do practice work, where she is given the chance to use her individual abilities.

A new course, Business 24, was offered for the first time this year. Required of all sophomores registered in the School of Business or the Prince School of Retailing, "Introduction to Business" develops a basic understanding of the way business functions in our economic system, and also helps students to carry on more efficiently their personal and consumer business activities. A specialized one-year program is offered for graduates of liberal arts colleges who desire a thorough preparation for careers in commercial fields.

Scribunal, official organization of the School of Business, celebrated its tenth anniversary this year. The club has done much to promote the elements of fun and friendship between the student body and the faculty.

Scribunal has been working to build up its membership to one hundred if possible. In order to engage the interest of school members in their club, officers prepared special meetings, teas, and talks which were held periodically during the year. In February, "Take a Letter, Please," a satirical movie, was shown. The March meeting was held jointly with the English, Ellen Richards, and Home Ec Clubs. "The New Look and How It Affects the Career Girl's Wardrobe" was the theme of a lecture given by Ruth Mugglebee, Fashion Editor of the Boston American.

Mildred Goodson, the secretarial "type"

It's ink for the English . . .

"If you want to learn to write. . . come to Simmons, little girl, you can't go wrong!" This familiar line from a traditional Simmons ditty refers to Simmons' unique School of English—unique in that it offers its students a well-rounded education in the liberal arts as well as the technical arts of publishing, editing, advertising, journalism, and publicity.

In 1935 the English School, under the directorship of Dr. Robert M. Gay, reorganized its program to answer the needs of girls who have a particular bent for writing or for entering the "literary trades."

The present director, Raymond F. Bosworth, guides English School students in choosing courses and arranges special programs for those students with specific interests. It is possible, for instance, to combine courses in the English School with the School of Science to prepare for employment on a scientific journal, or with the School of Business to prepare for jobs on house organs or employee magazines.

The major courses in the School of English are handled competently by professional experts; a city editor teaches journalism, an advertising production manager conducts the two-year course in publishing techniques, an artist gives his practical experience and advice in the fundamentals of layout, and an advertising manager teaches advertising copywriting.

Under this professional training, English majors spend their last two years at Simmons struggling with the problems of copyfitting, proofreading, and writing copy.

During the four-year program of the present graduating class, new courses have been added to increase the opportunities for specialization in the School of English: "Industrial Writing and Editing," and "Children's Books and Periodicals."

Each senior has an opportunity to work on at least one issue of the Simmons Review and during the process really gets the feel of meeting the ever-present "deadline." This practical experience calls into play all the principles that the girls learned in the classes of Mr. Valz, Mr. Bosworth, Mr. Fessenden, and Mr. Morang.

The English Club, not specifically a club for English School students, opens its activities to the whole College and offers a program of interesting speakers, book reviews, and discussions.

Simmons is a mecca for Home Ecca's

Elda Robb, Director

What's cookin'? In the School of Home Economics, that's a challenge that leads to conquest in such fields as textiles, food research, nutrition, teaching, and dietetics.

During her first two years, the student takes courses in home ec and science which form a basis for her professional work.

The study of foods and nutrition leads to positions in dietetics, institutional management, public health nutrition, and research. The textile field is open to those students who wish to go into labs or manufacturing plants. This program also includes facilities for the student whose interest lies in dress design and related creative work.

The course in home management requires the student to spend eight weeks at Pilgrim House on campus, where she gains wide practical experience in the science and art of homemaking. A course in child development affords an opportunity to observe child behavior at the nursery school.

Girls who wish to teach home economics take courses in education combined with a program which gives a broad general knowledge of the field. During her senior year, the student spends one day

This year the School of Home Economics offered several new courses in cooking, sewing, and home decorating. These courses were specially designed for girls in other schools at Simmons.

During their regular meetings every month, Home Ec Club members raised money through a Towle silver display, sandwich sales, and catering.

For three days in October, Ruth Thompson, Virginia Johnson, and M. Catherine Starr, advisor, attended the Province I workshop meeting at the University of Vermont. All club members got together at the Garland School December 6 for the Massachusetts Home Economics College Club meeting.

On February 18, members celebrated the twenty-first birthday of Home Management House by a tea to raise money for new equipment.

A joint meeting with Scribunal in March featured a speaker on fashion. Members attended the Spring Conference of the Massachusetts Home Economics College Club Department at Bradford Junior College. The annual Home Ec Club May Banquet concluded club activities for the year.

Room 318 is the mental gymnasium where most seniors in the School of Library Science put to practical use such courses as Introduction to Librarianship, Reference, Book Selection, Cataloguing, and Library Organization and Administration. Each student has her own desk at which she handles practical library exercises with the assurance of a professional librarian.

The program of the school enables the student to deal with general problems in library science, and at the same time allows her to concentrate on specific studies in her chosen field.

After a basic general education for the first three years, the student spends her senior and graduate years in a concentrated program of technical training. Two weeks of field work in libraries of recognized standing is required before graduation.

The many fields open to the library school graduate are included in four general categories—service in public, college, and university libraries; children's library work; technical processes; and special library service. Moreover, graduates are filling positions in business firms, newspaper and magazine offices, insurance and advertising establish-

Teas have been held each Thursday afternoon for all members and faculty of the library school, and friendly relationships have been furthered by regular meetings of 020, official organization of the school.

On October 16, President Frances Foulkes welcomed 020 members at a "Get-Acquainted Tea" in the lounge.

Miss Hannah D. French of the Wellesley College Library spoke on "Early American Bookbinding" on November 20.

At 020's meeting on December 15, the Christmas spirit prevailed. Santa Claus, in the person of Mr. Rollo Silver, came—complete with costume and bag. In his pack, he found lollypops and candy canes for the children of the faculty and gifts for all club members.

Mrs. Warren Lothrop of the Pan American Society gave an illustrated talk on "Exhibits" on February 19. The March meeting was held jointly with the Home Ec, Scribunal, and English Clubs. In May, members attended their club's annual banquet in the form of a backyard picnic.

Neat, efficient, and well-trained—that's a Simmons nurse! Students who enter the Simmons College School of Nursing acquire the knowledge and skills requisite for high quality performance in the various fields of professional nursing.

Freshmen enroll in N-1, a five-year program leading to a Bachelor of Science degree, a diploma in nursing, and eligibility for state examinations to become registered nurses.

The School of Nursing offers a highly diversified program that combines scientific, liberal, and professional courses.

During the summer sessions of the first two years, prospective nurses spend six weeks at Massachusetts General Hospital and the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, attending classes on the principles and history of nursing.

The middle of the junior year finds the nurses ready for their two full years of hospital experience. Here Simmons girls get a taste of all phases of the nursing world. This hospital training is divided into specific fields; three months are spent in pediatric nursing at the Children's Hospital, three months in obstetric work at the Boston Lying-In, and three months in psychiatric training at McLean Hospital.

After this basic training, the nurses, now dependable individuals, return to the college building for a final half-year of special courses in public health nursing, in affiliation with the Boston Visiting Nurse Association.

Lyndon McCarroll, director of the School of Nursing, announced two new practices: "In January, the juniors received their caps before beginning their two-year hospital affiliation; and a Senior Tea was given in May at which the seniors were presented with the pin of the Simmons College School of Nursing to complete the graduate uniforms."

For the February '48 semester, "Nursing Education 27" (ward administration) was initiated. In the next school year, a survey of the nursing field will be given for the benefit of graduate nurses studying at Simmons.

Nursing students are united by the Anne Strong Nursing Club. Each month this club sponsors meetings featuring speakers from the many fields of nursing. During social hours, girls get together to compare "nursing notes."

Some professions are entered into only after the Bachelor of Science degree has been received and graduate work in the field has been done. The student who realizes her professional interest may be exercised only after more than four years of college enrolls in the School of Preprofessional Studies.

The School of Preprofessional Studies offers a basic four-year program which is designed to prepare the "prepro" girl for graduate work. This basic undergraduate program lays a firm foundation for the student's future professional training, and while it emphasizes a study of cultural subjects, it also allows the student to place emphasis on subjects in her chosen field.

There are three programs within the preprofessional school which lead to advanced work.

The student who wishes to prepare for a school of library science concentrates on subjects which give a broad general background of liberal arts subjects, such as economics, English, psychology, and sociology. A specified number of electives in the library science field are chosen by the student under the direction of Dr. Harrison L. Harley, director of the school.

The prepro girl may choose to prepare for work in the field of medicine. This course leads to occupation in the closely allied professions of dentistry or nursing. The student may also concentrate on occupational therapy or physiotherapy.

Some students follow a four-year course with an eye to the field of social work. These girls have in mind the Simmons School of Social Work or other graduate schools throughout the country. The future social worker must have an understanding of basic human problems, and must also have certain abilities with which she may solve such problems. Her background, therefore, must be broad enough to equip her both with general knowledge and intensive professional training. English, economics, history, psychology, government, and sociology are emphasized. Social statistics is required in the fourth year, besides an introductory course in social work which includes a study of the history and current status of social institutions. Whether the student plans to concentrate on medical or civic social work, these qualifications are essential for all girls who desire a career in the field.

"Prince Girl" is synonymous with "smart," "efficient," and "pleasant!" These are only a few of the qualities that make a student of the Prince School of Retailing unique in her field. Besides being a perfect example of the well-groomed and fashionable young lady, she is thoroughly trained in the merchandising, promotional, personnel, and management vocations.

The course of study in retailing is such that it enables the student to observe, and at the same time take part in a practical application of the knowledge and theory she is taught in class. Before beginning the intensive phase of her professional education, a Prince girl spends the first two years at the main college building on the Fenway, where her program consists of English, economics, psychology, typing, history, government, and sociology. With this substantial background, the student then goes to the Prince School of Retailing on Commonwealth Avenue for study of the interrelation of store functions, management, publicity, and control.

The highlights in the retail curriculum are the periods spent doing field work in department or specialty stores. The administration arranges the field work positions so that they coincide as nearly as possible with the students' class work. Through actual employment, they acquire insight into operations behind the scenes in department stores.

In addition to her part-time experience, the student is assigned to a full-time position for a six-week period preceding Christmas.

The senior year completes retailing training, and again the courses are combined with field work. Seniors are paid regular salaries while they act as junior executives in various stores.

The degree of Bachelor of Science which is conferred at the end of the four-year period is evidence of the graduate's eligibility for an executive position in a retail store as buyer or personnel director, or for a job as teacher or supervisor of retailing in a college or secondary school.

These are goals certainly worthy of the student's interest and endeavor, as any Prince girl will readily affirm. The only requirements for entrance to the school are "good health, common sense, and personality."

Acid-eaten sweaters and skirts, pink, blue, and green fingers, burned thumbs—these are marks which betray the girl in the science school. Whether specializing in biology, chemistry, physics, or physical therapy, she may be found at almost any time in one of the labs on the second floor. Her type of work, and her thorough preparation for it, asssure the science student an excellent position in her field before and after graduation.

The program of the School of Science opens to the student many interesting and diverse fields. After graduation, she may work as a technician in a hospital, assist a private physician, or be employed by the city and state health departments. Some students prepare for work in private and industrial research laboratories as analysts and research assistants. Some enter the educational field as teachers of science and mathematics. In answer to an increasing demand, a new program in physical therapy was introduced this year.

In affiliation with the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, the School of Science will offer a course in orthoptics in the fall. Students will learn various orthoptic techniques and exercises designed to correct faulty eyesight.

A graduate course in clinical laboratory techniques or in public health laboratory procedures, including work in the preparation of vaccines and anti-toxins, is available to a limited number of students who are best qualified for advanced work. Either course leads to a diploma.

Ellen Richards, the student club of the science school, aims to bring together the girls in the four fields of science—biology, chemistry, physics, and physical therapy—so they may gain new information in all aspects of science.

The club's initiation party for sophomores in the school proved without doubt that science majors can enjoy themselves outside of the lab. In order to keep the students informed on the latest scientific developments, and to present various opinions on controversial issues, speakers were invited to address the club's regular meetings held on the fourth Thursday of each month in the lounge.

Ellen Richards and Scribunal staged their joint Christmas party this year. And in May, a barbecue was enjoyed by all Ellen Richards members in the backyard.

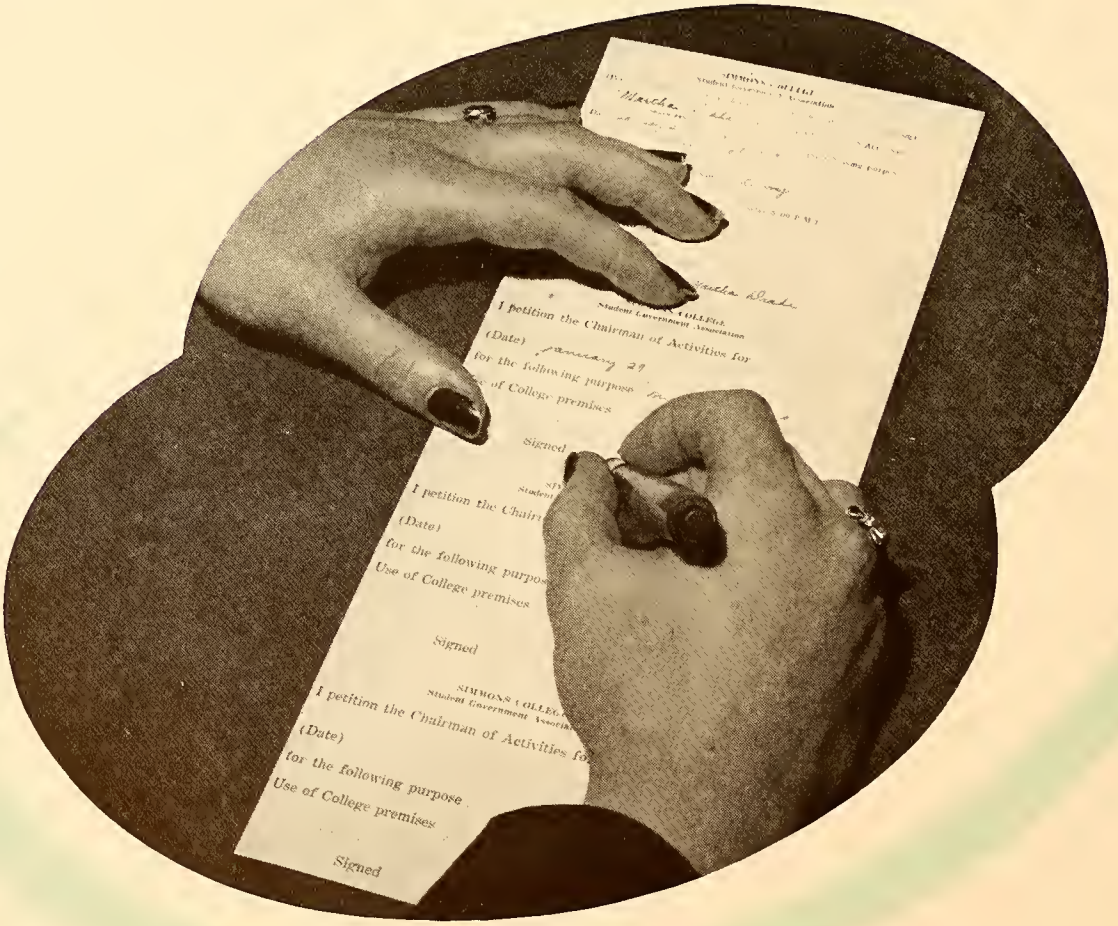
Coöperation



The interchange of ideas is a vital part of our education. Not only do we learn individually from our textbooks, but we all broaden our perspective by working together in active partnership.

Because we are interested in the ideas of the other fellow, we enjoy working in our club and class activities after school hours.

The new social and health center will provide for even closer integration of our activities, and the recognition of common ideals.

Self-government is

Student Government is a government of, by, and for the students. It is the students. It is an example of democracy functioning on a large scale in our microcosm.

Freshman year, all incoming students are introduced to the theory and practice of the Honor System. Every new student is made familiar with the Honor Code, the basis for the successful operation of Stu-G. The Honor Code is not an ideal, for its success has been proven.

Since each underclassman is a potential leader of Stu-G, every student is trained during her first three years by taking part in Stu-G functions. The freshman, sophomore, and junior classes elect from their numbers two representatives to represent them on Council.

Presiding over the Council is the President of Stu-G and five senior officers—the Vice-President, the Chairman of Honor Board, the Chairman of Social Activities, the Assistant Vice-President, and the Treasurer of Stu-G.

The Vice-President automatically assumes the duties of Chairman of Dormitory Council and Dormitory Board. These units operate on two levels on campus—to coordinate activities and to investigate violations of the Honor System. The Chairman of Honor Board and her helpers determine probation for students who disregard the Honor Code in the classroom and during exams. They also investigate serious offenses passed on by Dorm Board. Assisting all divisions of Stu-G is the Advisory Committee, which consists of the Dean, three alumnae instructors in the college, and three members of Stu-G Council.

Social Activities Chairman and her committee coordinate the social affairs of both commuter and dorm students by sponsoring teas and dances throughout the year. This year Stu-G presented its annual Christmas Formal at the Hotel Bradford, Olde English Dinner, the Freshman-Junior Bib Party, Field Day, and May Party.

Open meetings are held regularly, where students may witness Stu-G in operation.

The Beef Box outside of Room 116 is ready at all times to receive complaints from the students. Some beefs are trivial and others significant. In either case, Stu-G investigates and takes action accordingly.

In October, in the largest election ever held at Simmons, students voted to join NSA, an organization supported by student governments throughout the country. The Simmons Stu-G feels that by taking part in the activities of the National Students' Association we will be helping other colleges to reach the goals that we at Simmons have already realized.

The program and significance of NSA were discussed on a radio program on February 5. Jean Stocks, former President of Student Government, represented Simmons. Participating in the program were Harvard, Radcliffe, M.I.T., Northeastern, Emmanuel, and Boston University. Again on February 19, Simmons took part in a radio program with other representatives of Boston Colleges. At this Stu-G clinic, "Problems of Student Government and its Organization in Greater Boston Colleges" was discussed. The former Simmons president pointed out specific examples of how our Student Government functions at Simmons and with what a high degree of success.

- Simmons' introduction to NSA—Tom MacDonald speaks

Simmons was a part of the NSA from its very inception. In December, 1946, Student Government received an invitation to send two delegates to a conference of college students held at the University of Chicago. This conference was the beginning of a series of events which led to the formation of the National Student Association, and to Simmons' affiliation with it.

Simmons students Esther Maletz and Patricia Murphy attended the constitutional convention at the University of Wisconsin in September, 1947, and upon returning to school, embarked upon a campaign to educate Simmons students as to the advantages and disadvantages of joining the NSA. News articles every week explained the functions and structure of NSA. In October, Thomas MacDonald of Suffolk University spoke at an NSA assembly. During NSA week from November 17 to 21, Larry Jaffa of Harvard, regional chairman of the NSA, spoke at a Stu-G open meeting; News devoted most of that week's issue to NSA; and a Simmons representative spoke at special house meetings each evening. This intensive campaign culminated in a three-day election at which students were asked the question: Shall Simmons join the NSA? They answered yes—723 to 183—the largest number of votes in any student election in the history of Simmons College.

a new high in student cooperation

Simmons NSA was then put on a more permanent basis. The senior representative was awarded a seat on Stu-G Council as an ex-officio member. Two representatives were elected from each class to the new NSA committee. NSA representatives attended regional meetings at Mt. Holyoke and B.U.; they conducted a cost-of-living survey on campus, and sponsored a regional forum on Activities of NSA to which representatives from all colleges were invited. Under their sponsorship, a regional survey on Academic Freedom and Student Rights was initiated, and questionnaires on the subject were sent to colleges all over New England. Four representatives from Simmons Stu-G attended a NSA-sponsored conference of Stu-G representatives in February, and Elsie Mainwaring spoke for Simmons students at an all-college opposition to the Barnes Bill, under NSA guidance, in the same month.

The NSA is a non-partisan, non-political college student organization authorized and supported by the official student governing bodies of American colleges. It represents the community of interests of U.S. students, and works on campus, regional, and national levels to promote friendlier and closer relations among students at home and abroad. Among its aims are the development of more independent and democratic student governments and newspapers.

NSA hopes to broaden the basis of the college community by stimulating scholarships and other aids to students. It proclaims the right of students to engage independently in research, to form clubs, and to participate freely in off-campus activities. It is working to eliminate discrimination based upon race, religion, or economic circumstances, in both college admissions and use of facilities. NSA aims to improve curricula by means of student course-evaluation, and supports the principle of academic freedom of professors.

Simmons NSA got off to a good start in its first year on campus. The future promises increased activities and increased benefits.

• Inter-Club Council, hub of the clubs

Activities of all clubs and classes at Simmons are supervised by Inter-Club Council and its twenty-eight members. ICC also acts as a kind of clearing house where organizations within the college discuss freely any problems which arise during the year. Through its duties as coördinator of club activities, ICC serves to further strengthen and unify clubs and classes.

This year ICC has concentrated upon the promotion of religious good-will and understanding. Dr. Gale, Professor of Religion at Wellesley College, was the first speaker at a series of inter-religious meetings in the lounge. The lectures which followed featured a Catholic and a Jewish clergyman. Through such a religious program ICC hopes to encourage the support of all students in reaching its ultimate goal—a new chapel on campus.

In the spring, ICC sponsored an all-college weekend when students invited family and friends to Spring Production and News Dance.

The formation of three new organizations at Simmons represents the crystallization of new ideas.

An organization which concentrates on arriving at an understanding of world problems, namely the International Relations Council, was the first new club to appear in 1947 and 1948. Last year, a group of students met to discuss current international problems. Several informal meetings were held at which Simmons students from Greece, Norway, and France spoke. Miss Sara Landau, formerly of the Economics Department at the college, encouraged the formation of an International Relations Council. In the early fall of 1947, students who attended the earlier meetings got together to write a constitution for IRC.

Club meetings featured foreign student speakers who discussed their native cultures, their countries' backgrounds, and current political and economic problems.

Last year, Students for Democratic Action came to Simmons when USSA affiliated with it nationally. This year a majority of Simmons SDA members dissolved SDA and voted to join the Progressive Citizens of America because of this organization's more active program. PCA now has fifty-five members who have demonstrated their interest in political issues of the nation.

On November 16, speaker Florence Luscomb of the Civil Liberties Union was a guest of PCA. On December 11, the organization held an open meeting on the "State of Civil Liberties in the United States Today," at which a research panel presented its report to a capacity audience. On January 9, PCA sponsored an assembly at which Joseph Salerno, president of the Massachusetts CIO spoke on the Taft-Hartley Law as it affects labor. On February 10, John Ciardi, Harvard poet and professor, spoke on Universal Military Training.

PCA members have been busy drawing up and circulating petitions. They supported Henry Wallace as a candidate for president in 1948; they urged rent and housing control in Massachusetts; they defended James Hines, and backed the abolition of the House un-American Activities Committee.

In March, 1947, a group of students began proceedings toward the formation of the Eastern Orthodox Club. After the regular four months' probation period, Stu-G passed its constitution, and in November, the club became an official Simmons organization.

Its purpose is to seek more knowledge of the Orthodox faith, and to bring the different nationalities of the faith together in an educational and social unit.

On December 10, Father Upson gave an illustrated lecture on the Holy Liturgy of the Orthodox Church. Members enjoyed a party-dance with the Tech's Hellenic society, the Technicon, on Saturday, December 13, at Walker Memorial. The great success of the get-together resulted in the Simmons chapter's playing hostess to M.I.T. later in the year.

On January 28, the Boston University Orthodox Club entertained Simmons students at a mass meeting. In February, Simmons girls invited students from near-by colleges to attend the Cambridge Orthodox Church, where Father Theodorides spoke on "The Orthodox Church of American and Modern Thinking."

HILLEL

Among the religious clubs on campus is the Hillel Foundation, an organization devoted to the establishment of a Jewish community at Simmons for the cultural, religious, and social enrichment of its Jewish students.

Hillel is sponsored by the B'Nai B'Rith, a national adult Jewish group.

The program of this club is carefully planned by the executive board and the director, Rabbi Rayfield Helman, to offer a varied and interesting schedule of activities. During the past year, Hillel's monthly meetings, featuring speakers, recitals, panel discussions and inter-faith programs, have been supplemented by tea dances, a bridge party, picnic, theater party, Hillel-Tufts weekend, and Guest Banquet.

This year, all the Hillels of Greater Boston have joined together to sponsor Friday evening services each month as well as monthly dances.

IZFA, the Inter-Collegiate Zionist Federation of America, functions in conjunction with the over-all Hillel program. This group is devoted to the furtherance of Zionism and the spirit of Palestine.

Officers: seated, V. Marcus, M. Rodell, pres.; P. Sidman. Standing, E. Glazer, W. Dickerman.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

The purpose of the Christian Science Organization is to enlighten the college community by presenting the truth about Christian Science as taught in the Bible and in Science and Health. The success of this program has been proved by the active participation of club members this year in the furtherance of their aims.

On September 24, a welcoming tea for all students initiated club activities. On October 22, members held a Dutch-treat supper at Salmagundi's, after which they attended a Wednesday evening meeting at the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

The activities of the organization have been outstanding in that they have expanded to include other colleges in and around Boston. In November, the Simmons chapter was present at a reception of the Wellesley College Christian Science Organization, and a month later was a guest of M.I.T. In return, Simmons played hostess by sponsoring meetings in the college building.

On April 29, a lecture on Christian Science was given by Evelyn Heywood, a member of the Board of Lectureship of the Mother Church, First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston.

faith to seek the spiritual life

I.V.C.F.

The Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship has promoted the Christian faith by providing its members with increased knowledge of the Bible. The Simmons I.V.C.F. was founded to give Christian girls the opportunity to continue their Bible study at weekly meetings.

In November, Dr. Archer spoke on the "Principles of the Christian Faith;" Dr. F. Kiss, professor of anatomy at the University of Budapest, spoke on "Religious Life and Student Work in the Danubian States." On January 16, C. Stacey Woods, head of I.V.C.F. internationally, lectured at a meeting of all Boston chapters at Gordon Divinity School. A lecture by Dr. T. Norton Sterrett of the Student Foreign Missions Fellowship was given to the same group on February 20.

A weekend conference was held in May with B.U., Harvard, M.I.T., Wellesley, and Northeastern.

Many club members are planning to attend the New England and New York State Conference at Camp Pinnacle near Albany, N. Y., during the month of June. At least one girl is to be sent to the "Campus in the Woods" near Toronto for one month during the summer.

Officers: Carol Anne Pressey, Ruth Nelson, pres.; Harriet Nelson.

The first Newman Club was established at the University of Pennsylvania in 1839. Today there are over 350 clubs all over the country, which are joined to form the Newman Club Federation.

At Simmons, the Newman Club brings together all Catholic girls and provides for their spiritual and social direction. Besides having the largest membership of any club in the college, Newman functions both as a unit and in conjunction with the Newman Club Federation.

Every third Tuesday of each month Father Russell Ryan, chaplain, spoke in the lounge. Twice last year, in the spring and fall, the Simmons chapter held joint meetings and dances with M.I.T., the University of Massachusetts at Fort Devens, and Northeastern. A Mother-and-Daughter Communion Breakfast was held on the first Sunday in May on Mothers' Day, when new officers were installed.

Under the direction of the Federation, weekly dances were held at the Hotel Continental on Friday nights; and every first and third Saturday evening of each month members attended a dance at the Boston City Club.

DRAMATIC CLUB

Troupers, tread the boards, curtain going up! The Dramatic Club, one of our most active organizations, has just finished an eventful year.

It is the purpose of the club to arouse interest in the legitimate stage, and to provide worthwhile entertainment for the student body. The club made its first public appearance this year on December 5, at Competitives. By a close margin, the junior class walked away with the first prize—a silver loving cup.

At the annual Christmas pageant, the Dramatic Club presented the Nativity in which Priscilla White was featured as the Madonna.

At a meeting on February 3, club members chose Blithe Spirit as the play to be presented at the annual Spring Production on April 23 and 24. The play, directed by Harlan F. Grant of the New England Conservatory, was a great success as a result of wise casting and wise direction.

Perhaps the biggest event of the year was the club's sponsorship of the Harvard Dramatic Club's presentation of Ibsen's An Enemy of the People, at Boys' Latin School.

POSTER COMMITTEE

A small ad for the Simmons Review or an attractive display for an all-college bridge party—it makes no difference. The Poster Committee can do the trick.

Through the committee's dynamic layouts, Simmons girls are informed and reminded of all approaching activities—teas, dances, and assemblies.

The Poster Committee is composed of a group of twelve girls who, for a small fee, make posters to publicize any college or club event. The profits in the treasury at the end of the year are divided among the members in proportion to the number of posters each girl has made.

Early in December, a poster contest was held, displaying the work of the committee. Phyllis Gray, '48, was given first prize by faculty judges for her poster advertising the Hillel bridge party. Another contest was held in the spring when all posters made during the year were put on display and judged by the student body.

Even though they're busy dreaming up ideas most of the time, members took time out to enjoy their annual Dutch-Treat Supper.

Pursuit of culture . . .

Any girl interested in things literary will find sympathy and/or admiration if she makes herself a member of the English Club, an organization which thrives on the exploration of the cultural and aesthetic interests of Boston. Under the direction of Dr. Wylie Sypher, the thirty-nine members discuss and criticize current plays, novels, ballets, and all subjects related to the arts.

English Club girls are no armchair commentators. They become acquainted with current literary and artistic trends by attending theater parties and examining bulletin reports on plays and exhibits.

Mr. Frederick White of the Institute of Modern Art, and Mr. Zoltan Haraszti, Curator of Rare Books at the Boston Public Library, provided club members with stimulating ideas during the past year. A theater party to Lady Windemere's Fan highlighted club activities.

Academy was founded in 1919 as an organization which aimed at the promotion and understanding of the arts. Membership was on the basis of proficiency in the non-professional subjects. Requirements for admission were later changed to include proficiency in both professional and non-professional subjects. In 1943, Academy officially became the Simmons honor society.

This year Academy held a formal reception for new members in November in Evans Hall. Dan H. Fenn Jr., Assistant Dean of Freshmen at Harvard and member of the United Nations Association, spoke on world government. Students and faculty mingled in a friendly atmosphere where each member of Academy acted as hostess to a member of the faculty. The traditional theater and supper party in the spring, besides regular meetings, were held during the year.

Academy is the only club whose members are selected on the basis of scholarship. Qualifications for Academy are a higher than B average for at least two years, and fifty quality points the year before election.

Writers on "review"

That slick magazine bearing all the carmarks of a professional publication is the new Simmons Review.

The Review has appeared four times during the past year. Because it has absorbed three former publications—the old Simmons Review, The Prince Alumnae News, and the undergraduates' Fen Ways, the copy is specially written to be of interest to undergrads, alumnae, and all who have an interest in observing the development of the college.

The editorial staff is headed by Miss Dorothy Williams, professional managing editor and Simmons alumna. The advisory board is made up of a representative of the Alumnae Association, an undergraduate appointed each year by Student Government, and a college representative named by the college president. This year the board included Miss Helen Deacon, Jane Bond, '49, and Miss Sigrid Edge. All seniors in the English School gain practical experience by working on at least one issue of the Review.

The circulation goal has been set at 12,000 copies, and the degree of success of the Simmons Review will be measured by the response it receives from its readers. Ultimately the aim of the magazine is to draw together the many friends of the college, to make students, alumnae, and faculty realize their common objective—a new and better Simmons.

Every day is News day for the staff of the Simmons News. And everything that goes on around the college is meat for these reporters with a nose for news. From Thursday to Thursday events are covered. Tuesday is the final deadline and all stories are passed in to the editors. The Technical Staff edits and writes headlines for the copy which is sent to the Crimson Press Tuesday afternoons. On Wednesday this same staff goes over to Cambridge, "proves" the galleys, and "makes-up." Much of this work is real practical application for the girls in the English school. It wouldn't be Thursday to Simmons girls without being able to pick up their copies of News after seventh hour.

The editors this year have placed more emphasis on college events than ever before. "School news first" could be the motto of the News staff, yet students get coverage of world events, current political questions, and the latest in plays, books, and movies. The columns by Virginia Nowell, Barbara Jopling, and Connie Garvey have brought many of the more pertinent controversial subjects to the closer attention of Simmons girls. in Palestine have been discussed pro and con in these two columns. The witty and often scathing reviews of Esther Maletz have become a favorite in News. This year the paper has done much to publicize N.S.A. activities at Simmons, and has featured columns answering the questions that have arisen on organization and purpose. The students are kept informed of all happenings from current administrative action to where their classmates spent the weekend.

The Simmons News is one of the few college weeklies in the country which is not under the control of either faculty or administration. The only censorship imposed is the editors' standards of good judgment. Because it has tried to represent the voice of the majority, News is the voice of the student body. The paper co-operates closely with Stu-G and clubs and classes, and encourages open letters by the students.

The constant vigilance and interest of the staff in school affairs, plus thorough and accurate coverage of school events are perhaps the reason for the high quality of the Simmons News.

Business "heads" at the old stand

One day in May,

The second annual Mic banquet on May 1, 1947, marked the beginning of a year's work on the 1948 issue of Microcosm.

The idea for a theme for the '48 Mic came with the news of the Fiftieth Anniversary Appeal. To dedicate the book to a new Simmons seemed the natural thing to do.

During the summer Barbara Black, Editor-in-Chief, planned layouts to convey the book's modern tone. Mr. Dino Valz, technical advisor to the staff, gave much time and valuable assistance in planning, and later in producing the book. Meanwhile Marie Ochs, Publicity Manager, flooded the mails with letters to alums and members of the new freshman class, stressing the fact that Mic is a valuable volume in any library. Printing and engraving contracts were signed, and in September, the whole staff got to work in earnest to carry out their individual duties.

Lorrie Lundeberg, Circulation Manager, took over Hall Table fifth hour every Tuesday. Here budget payments were made by the students, and dollars were put on the line for reserved copies.

Velma Thompson balanced the budget, as manager Joan Macdonald planned her advertising campaign. On the assets side were the profits of the MIC Dance, of which Velma herself was chairman.

Julie Roper, Photographic Editor, and the Waid candid photographer spent the year covering all college events. Candids were cropped, plates made, proofs began to come in. Pat Washer and her art staff supplied sketches and lettering.

Nancy Shaw, Literary Editor, and the writing staff wore out typewriter ribbons, and Associate Editor Maudie Andrews fitted copy.

Between deadlines, the staff set aside February 16 to 21 as MIC Week. The Publicity Editor arranged attractive displays in the bookstore window and the library showcase, depicting the changes that have taken place in MIC during the past forty years.

Proofs began to return the following month, when Annette Abrams, Technical Editor, and her staff of proofreaders took over for the last big lap. Then it was a matter of only a few weeks before MIC was at the printers.

Staff members relaxed at last on May 3—Publication Day for the 1948 MICROCOSM.

GLEE CLUB

At step-singing in the fall and Pops in the spring, Simmons girls have always proved themselves able in the vocal department. The Glee Club provides an opportunity for students to take part in public performances throughout the school year.

The club was founded in 1908 by twenty-four girls, and with the Mandolin Club, formed the Musical Association. Glee Club is one of the oldest musical organizations at Simmons, and now boasts an all-time high membership of one hundred girls.

The Glee Club functions under the expert musical instruction of Mr. Wilmer T. Bartholomew, and has enjoyed a successful year under his direction. A Christmas concert was held at Fargo Building on December 15, the traditional vesper service at St. Paul's Church in Brookline. Meridythe Barker, '49, Gloria Clark, '51, Jane Nichols, '50, and Patricia Powers, '50, were featured soloists at both concerts. In the spring, the Simmons organization blended voices with the deep tones of the Harvard and Tech Glee Clubs. In addition, the club took part in the Commencement and Baccalaureate exercises.

ORCHESTRA

Four-ten...sweet music floats from the auditorium. What is it? The Simmonsaires, of course, the student orchestra under the professional direction of Mr. Sayrd Emerson Stone.

The Simmonsaires is a comparatively new organization here at Simmons. The group made its first appearance at a Student Government assembly rally on March 17, 1944, and appeared again the same night at Competitives. In the four years since, the orchestra has taken an active part in both student and faculty events.

The twelve members of the Simmonsaires hope to encourage added interest and participation on the part of everyone under the Simmons roof who has musical ability. The orchestra's specialties this year included the "Andante" from Haydn's Surprise Symphony and Schubert's "March Militaire."

This group supplied the music at Competitives in the fall, and played Christmas carols at Olde English Dinner in December. The Simmonsaires were further honored by invitations to play at Nurses' Capping and at President's Reception.

Social clubs and club socials

Y. W. C. A.

The Young Women's Christian Association at Simmons is an organization with a dual purpose. It is united in the desire to realize a full and creative life through a growing knowledge of God; it is united in its aim toward improving student-faculty relations through club activities.

The activities of the "Y" during the past year placed an increased emphasis on active membership through committee work. The club concentrated on inter-faith projects in cooperation with other religious clubs at Simmons and other colleges.

The eighty-four members of the club organized dances, sports, parties, suppers, and meetings. A "get acquainted with the Y" party was held in the fall and featured a tour of the Y.W. for new members. Early in the year, Mrs. Clifton Wharton was guest speaker at a buffet supper. In December, a dance was held in cooperation with C.L.A. of Boston University. A Christmas party, complete with gifts, tree, and games, was given at a nearby settlement house and highlighted holiday activities of the club. A series of discussions, speakers, and interviews added flavor to meetings throughout the year.

OUTING CLUB

Hiking, biking, and rock-climbing—bywords of Outing Club girls. Only those with strong constitutions and a surplus of vim need apply for membership in this popular organization at Simmons.

At monthly meetings in the lounge, the trips-director informed club members of plans for coming events, such as dances, trips, and get-togethers with surrounding colleges.

At their first active meeting in the fall, club members hiked around the Blue Hills, and then met at the top of Big Blue for supper and a song-fest with other college clubs.

An overnight bike trip to the Youth Hostel at Harvard, Mass., took place in October, with M.I.T. boys going along for the ride.

Jaffrey, New Hampshire, was a week-end paradise for winter sports fans when Outing Club members enjoyed skiing, ice-skating, sleigh-riding, and tobogganing there on March 5 to 7.

Although the club's principal aim is to promote interest in the out-of-doors, some Outing Clubbers preferred to release their energy in activities indoors. As a result, square dances were held in conjunction with men's colleges.

LE CERCLE FRANCAIS

A small but energetic group of madcmoiselles have been working to further the apprcciation of French culture and to promotc fellowship.

Le Cercle Francais Inter-Universitaire has becn providing more and more opportunities for thc expansion of the club's interests into broader social and cultural fields. This intercollegiate organization combines social activity with relief work. At the same time, it enables college students who are interested in France to meet, work together, and exchange ideas. Lucie Cottle, '48, was clected CFIU representative from Simmons this year.

On November 9, club members attended a social at the University of Massachusetts, Fort Devens. In the fall, members enjoyed a prevue showing of Nais at the Old South Theater.

Regular club meetings throughout the ycar provided excellent chances for members to practice their abilities in conversational French. A business meeting, a Christmas party, a town meeting with M.I.T., and a talk and slides by Mr. Paul Kann of the French Department show the diversity of interest in the activities of Le Cercle Francais during the past year.

PAN-AMERICAN

Saludos Amigos! Thc Pan-American Club is for thosc intercsted in our colorful neighbors to thc South. The club givcs its mcmbcrs a bctter understanding of Latin America and promotes co-operation and friendship among thc Amcricas.

The past year was a busy one for the sixty Pan-Americans. Speakers represcnting various Latin American countries, as well as talented musicians and entertainers, were featured at the monthly meetings in the lounge. In December, a colorful Christmas party was held featuring Spanish caroling. Pan-American members were guests of Harvard's El Club Espanol over at Phillips Brooks House for a Christmas Tertulia which featured dancing, refreshments, and a Mexican grab bag.

In February, members were invited to a Valentine party of the Pan-American Society of New England at Society headquarters on Newbury Street.

A "Spring Fiesta" highlighted the second semester at which the club played host to students from local colleges at a colorful dancing party. The Latin American Orchestra, made up of young men from Latin American countries, supplied the music.

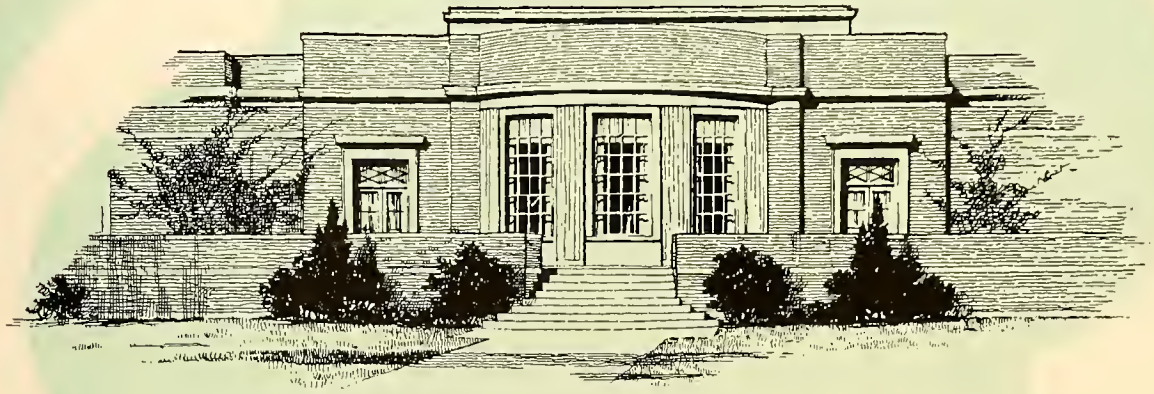
Recreation



We have fun at formals, release our pent-up energy in a mean game of tennis, or relax over our coffee cups at Jimmy's. Get-togethers with our college chums make up the happiest part of our Simmons memories.

Some day soon, we're going to have a new refectory, new residence halls, and a more beautiful campus. With added opportunity for relaxation and recreation on campus, we may look forward to an even closer association with our fellow-students in our New Simmons.

Food for the fans

. . . fun in our own backyard

As soon as the first duek returns to Muddy River, Sally knows that spring has eome at last, and ventures outside to enjoy the beauties of nature.

The backyard is most famous for Field Day. For weeks in advanee of the great day, committees put their heads together to make plans for the big event. Overnight, the baekyard is transformed as if by magic into a fair grounds. Club members serve up hotdogs, eoke, and iee eream from gaily deeorated booths.

The ery "play ball" signals the erowd that the big event is on. Faculty in lumberjack shirts vie with the student baseball team in a fight to the finish, as rooters flock to the diamond. Boos and eheers resound when a heretofore dignified professor slides into homeplate with mustard on his ehin.

After the game, all classes compete in a tug-of-war, and saek and suitease raees. At sunset, weary winners and losers storm the food tables, then sit down on the grass for a pienie supper.

Besides setting the seene for Field Day fun, the baekyard provides reereation the year round. In spring and fall, students find the benches and the baeksteps a pleasant spot for study or ehats betwcen classes. Mr. Rankin is always deep in eonversation there with the smokers, while others just soak up the sun. Tennis and archery enthusiasts shout aeross the grass, and the lawn-mower whirs by with Jimmy in the saddle.

Inside, too, are favorite spots for reereation. After elass is over, Sally's first stop is the noteboard where she may find a note from Suzie, possibly a letter from home, or a white card from Library A.

She proceeds to her class bulletin board, which keeps her informed of approaching events and class meetings. On her way past the blackboard, she is startled when she learns that "English 20 will meet today." This calls for more energy which is supplied by an "O Henry" from Show Case. Since the lounge is right next door, she can't resist dropping in to say "hi" to her colleagues. Some are enjoying the privacy of an easy chair, while the more rugged sit cross-legged on the floor, there to discuss the uncertain state of men and nations.

Sally goes out to Hall Table where voting is in full swing, prom and theater tickets are being sold, and budget payments received for Sally's favorite book—MICROCOSM, the book of the year.

To escape the hurly-burly of the upper levels, Sally descends to the lower depths and enters notorious Room 052A. Bridge addicts are obscured by the butt fiends' smoke screen as Sally lights up a Camel.

Her natural craving for good food is gratified in the cafeteria. Sally remembers the fun she had here at Bib Party and bridge tournaments.

Up in the gym, Mrs. Josephine Chapman, Assistant Professor of Physical Education, gives Sally valuable tips on how to lose those extra pounds. Posture and conditioning, basketball, badminton, modern dance, and fencing keep her in trim the year round.

. . . campus is the place for cut-ups

Happy hours on campus plus hectic hours on the Met add up to the total time which dorm and commuter students spend after class is over.

Brookline Avenue campus is home to the dorm students. Within this colony, made up of shady lawns, residence halls, and cozy rooms, a valuable experiment in living together is being carried on every day.

Afternoon teas and informal gatherings have helped to make Evans a popular place for all. Seniors garbed in weird apparel invade Evans Game Room once a year for their traditional Hobo Party. Each night students drop in for ping-pong, bridge, or a gab fest.

Gathered around the colonnade for step-singing, dorm and commuter voices blend as they sing of their college, and class serenades class.

Pet hangouts of dorm students have come to be included in the Simmons tradition, so whether it be coffee at Jimmy's or cokes at the Drug, it's all a part of education "there."

Commuters swing and sway with Commuters, commonly known as strap-hangers, find that riding the Met is a complete education in itself. Buses and street cars offer supplementary courses to Simmons students, at the modest tuition rate of twenty cents per day.

All strap-hangers major in Physical Fitness, a course based on the Darwinian theory of survival of the fittest. This course includes practical problems in Book Juggling, How to Avoid Decapitation by Slamming Doors, and Methods of Self-Protection when Confronted with Hostile Bodies.

The Met also offers a psych course in How to Estimate the Behavior of a Street Car. If the student uses the trial and error principle long enough, the Met guarantees that at the end of her fourth year at Human Relations is an elective for upperclassmen, a requirement for all freshmen. Under realistic conditions, students learn to smile sweetly at toe-treading fellow passengers.

The Met gives a course in indoor advertising in affiliation with Simmons. Because there's usually no place else to look, commuters don't find it hard to stare at the trolley and bus ads. Unconsciously, they absorb fundamentals of layout, copywriting, and high pressure salesmanship.

Commuters of the Huntington Avenue line proudly announce a new find this year. To Sharaf's and Howard Johnson's has been added the name of the Toddle House. Here, in the shadow of the fire station, it is rumored one may buy the world's best cheeseburger for a very reasonable sum.

EVERYWHERE

From September to June, Sally takes advantage of Bostontown and its many accommodations for merrymaking. Dancing to smooth music is her pet pastime, so she joins her classmates in hotel ballrooms around the town for MIC, News Dance and her class prom.

Ever-hungry Sally has the inside dope on Boston's eating places. She is familiar with Durgin-Park after dark and Chinatown after proms.

It's only five minutes by trolley to Symphony Hall, where Sally enjoys Pops or hears regularly scheduled concerts by Boston Symphony. If she happens to be a jazz fiend, she taps her foot to the rhythms of Sabby Lewis down at the Savoy on Huntington Avenue.

On quiet Sunday afternoons, aesthetic Sally finds peace of mind in the Museum of Fine Arts, just across the Fenway.

But Sally's roving is not confined to the city of Boston. She keeps the trains, planes, and buses humming all year, as she runs down to Annapolis for a dance or up to Dartmouth for skiing.

During warm evenings of the fall and spring, students gathered once a week to carry on one of Simmons' oldest and dearest traditions—step-singing. Seniors occupied the place of honor on the colonnade until Class Day, when the steps were passed on to the Class of '49.

The Lord and Lady of the medieval manor presided over the festive board at Olde English Dinner in December. Budding Bernhardts held the spotlight at Competitives on December 5, and the silver loving cup was awarded to the juniors for the best performance. At Christmas Pageant, Priscilla White, most beautiful senior, played the part of the Madonna.

A tradition close to everyone's heart is Simmons Night at Pops. At reserved tables in Symphony Hall, students and faculty sipped claret punch and listened to their favorite selections.

The juniors, armed with pillowcases and scissors invaded meadows near and far to pick daisies for the chain they carried on that traditional day of all days—Commencement.

Classes

The four classes at Simmons realize the similarity of their aims. Juniors guide freshmen; seniors and their sophomore sisters cooperate in work and play.

Simmons is going to have greater facilities for accommodating all classes. The new buildings are no longer a dream. They have become very real to us during the past months. We see the Science Building as part of the plans for providing future classes with enlarged opportunities for a better education.

FRESHMEN

In September, Simmons opened its doors to 317 freshmen. For three bewildering days, the newcomers underwent a somewhat painful process called "Orientation." But the Junior Welcome Committee relieved the burden with informal parties after school hours.

Soon the freshmen were caught up in the busy routine of college life. Early in the fall, they were introduced to their future profs at a formal reception in the Refectory.

On November 6, juniors entertained their sister class at the Freshman-Junior Bib Party. After songs and refreshments, there was the traditional mad scramble for autographs. Josephine Maillet, '51, was pronounced the winner for having the most names on her bib. Next month, on December 5, the freshmen cut ghoulish figures at Competitives in The Ghost in the Green Gown.

At a dinner on campus, Marjorie Clock was announced president of the class. Ellen Manning, junior vice-president, pinned corsages on the shoulders of the new officers.

Freshmen were guests of the sophs in February, at a gay Valentine party in the cafeteria. And their big night came on April 9, when they danced at the Parker House Roof, at their first class prom. 'Nuf said.

SOPHOMORES

Sophs and their pink elephant have proved they know the ropes by now. Being old hands at this college deal, they neatly divided their time between study and fun.

In the fall they presented the sophomore play When the Whirlwind Blows at Competitives.

At a Valentine Party on February 10, they played hostess to the freshmen on a Valentine cruise. The sophs revealed some heretofore hidden talent when they kept their guests entertained with skits.

Sophs shuffled and shone at their class dance on March 6, in the Crystal Ballroom of the Kenmore.

One early May morning, they staged a mass invasion of senior dormitories. They sang until their sister class had been properly aroused from peaceful slumber. Afterwards, out on the green, the soph class president crowned the Queen of the May and gay dances whirled around the Maypole. And last but not least came the pièce de résistance—a feast of delectable strawberry shortcake.

The Sophomore Luncheon in the spring marked the half-way point in the college career of the Class of 1950. They prepared to take over their responsibilities as members of the Junior Welcome Committee.

Dopey, the junior class mascot, grinned an angelic grin and spread the welcome mat to the incoming freshman class during Orientation Week. As host of the Junior Welcome Committee, he introduced the newest Simmons students to their future alma mater.

A shiny class ring of standardized style and design had that new look on Dopey's finger in October. At Competitives, a proud Dopey, silver loving cup in hand, bowed and smiled over the footlights to a capacity audience. For he had won first prize for the junior play, The Purple Door-Knob, directed by M. J. Mahoney.

Donning his best big and tucker, he escorted his freshman sister to the Bib Party where he assures us "a good time was had by all." He dressed in his white tie and tails for Junior Prom at the Somerset on February 27.

Dopey's nose got sunburned as he and his crew of 49'ers picked daisies out in the country one day in early June. Over on campus, he sat in the grass and wove the flowers into a chain. This chain he carried on Class Day, June 5. On Graduation Day, he ushered out the Class of '48, and looked ahead to September when he would become a senior.

- Pris White, the beautifulest
- D. Nichols, our best-dressed

September 1944, and we were freshmen at Simmons. Those were the days when gym, College Op, and English 10 were requirements in our course of study.

We felt the effects of the war, too. Our men were rationed, and we stood for hours in line outside the bookstore waiting to turn in our empty package of Rameses number 21.

That fall, Mrs. Roosevelt was guest at an assembly, and our war fund goal was set at $2800. 1944 was a presidential election year, too. We elected Thomas E. Dewey president at a college election.

We got our first real taste of the college social whirl at MIC Dance in November, when we promenaded sedately with our soldiers and sailors at the Hotel Statler. We elected Pepper Mainwaring our class president on November 17.

Meantime we were knitting for the Red Cross, for Britain, and France, and we bought Russian relief articles in the bookstore. When we weren't taking notes from Wallbank and Taylor, we read Earth and High Heaven and went to a matinee of Dark of the Moon at the Shubert.

- Midge Klein in a picture of charm

At an election we made our mascot a frisky colt, and at the Freshman Formal in May, we met Frisky for the first time.

One of our classmates, Maude Morris, attended the San Francisco Conference, as secretary to the Liberian delegation. At last, on May 10, part of the war was over. We didn't celebrate much, but we listened to news broadcasts and to speeches in the Lounge, and then returned to our morning classes.

That summer we learned that the Japanese war was over, too. In September, the first male veterans enrolled at Simmons. How we laughed about that cartoon by Bob Coyne in the Boston Post.

We had a big weekend at the end of April, including a play and supper, open house at our Saturday classes, and News Dance on Saturday night. Our Soph Shuffle created a big bang at the Commander,

The smile with the punch

Disguised deviltry: which is witch?

Forty-eight, too. Remember those balloon decorations that kept breaking all through the dance? We finished our sophomore year, knowing that the fall would bring with it an end to our days of dabbling in the liberal arts.

When we came back in September, we heard for the first time about the Fiftieth Anniversary Appeal. We learned, too, that Jane Bergwall was to have the leading role in the Harvard Drama Club's play—the first woman to be so honored. Pat Murphy was elected to attend the N.S.O. meeting at Smith, and Jackie Trapp was elected editor of the Simmons News. Mary Kerr and Midge Klein represented Simmons at the Conference of American College Students in Chicago.

Our junior year was crowded with studying and our various club meetings. We braved a raging blizzard to get to our Junior Prom at the Somerset Hotel. It was our first college dinner dance, and we all received silver bracelets just for being juniors.

At the May Party, Stocksy was elected Stu-G president. We picked daisies for the chain, and we ushered at graduation and at President's Reception. When we left, we knew that next year would be our last chance to take advantage of all Simmons offers.

The first week of senior year, it was hot Indian summer, but we didn't mind. We paraded in our caps and gowns just the same. We raised cain at the Hobo Party at Evans, and were a picture of senior sophistication at our prom at the Somerset. We neglected our studying to read Raintree County. Our last big whirl began with Senior-Faculty Supper in April. Then came last-minute cramming, those final finals, and Class Day arrived. We entertained our parents, and next day introduced them to President Beatley at the reception following Baccalaureate. On Monday we donned our caps and gowns for the last time to receive our degrees.

Now that it's all over, we find ourselves looking backward, and feeling a bit nostalgic for those brief years. We'll always remember Simmons as it was then. But now, in a more practical frame of mind, we're thinking, too, of the students of the future. To them we wish great happiness in this "new Simmons"—a college which we hope will always treasure past memories of us—the Class of '48.

Fare well!

It's a custom at Simmons . . .

YUEY'S

Chinese food and good cheer are Yucy's specialtics. Sally goes there for coffee and snacks, and a pleasant interval between classes. What could be finer than relaxing to the music of Yuey's super juke-box, and maybc eating some of that chickcn chow mein or cgg foo yong? The sandwiches are good, too, and the atmosphere is always inviting.

THOMASIAN'S

Sally takes her watch to thc jewelry store at thc corner of Huntington and Longwood for prompt repair scrvice. She can have minor repairs made whilc she inspects their fine line of Hamilton, Waltham, and Elgin watches. She docsn't have to go downtown to buy that shower or birthday gift when Thomasian's has Elgin compacts, Deltah Pearls, R.C.A. Victor Radios, and a hundred other fine products.

THE PILGRIM ROAD STORE

This is where Sally picks up her paper in the morning, and buys her stamps late at night. It's a popular spot, good for a snack or a bull-session, even for cramming. The booths are always full. Sally can get her cosmetics herc, or buy the latest magazincs. Stationery, cokc, and candy change hands while thc Simmons girls chat over that good coffee.

150th Anniversary

As early as 1798 Messrs. Ames and Parker had set up a printing press in Andover. Enlarged during the early years of the nineteenth century through the enterprise of Dr. Eliphalet Pearson, the first principal of Phillips Academy, Andover, which had been established 20 years earlier, the press became widely known throughout the United States and many foreign countries through the publications printed for Harvard University and the Andover Theological Seminary.

The present Andover Press, building on noble traditions, is today perhaps the best-known school and college print shop in New England. Proud of a glorious past, but not satisfied to rest on its laurels, the press has kept pace with the times by enlarging its plant and adding modern equipment in all departments.

In its one hundred and fiftieth year, the Andover Press, Ltd., is proud to number among its publications the 1948 MICROCOSM.

The ANDOVER PRESS, Ltd.

ANDOVER, MASSACHUSETTS

The 39th volume of

dedicated to a new Simmons presents an illustrated record of the academic year 1947-1948, edited by the undergraduates, in a limited edition of 415 copies, privately printed by letterpress. The body type is English Baskerville No. 169, set by monotype. The display type is Kaufmann Bold and Sans Serif Bold, set by hand. The paper is eighty-pound enamel of the best grade, and the cover material is fabricoid. Printing plates are photoengravings on copper and zinc. The book is bound in sixteen-page signatures. The volume was completed and distributed in May, 1948.
